Bryan Support Essential to Wilson's Re-Election.

Washington, July 14. (Special correspondence). Senator John W. Kern of Indiana has been in Washington of late, and has added no little color to the Capitol's already torrid summer temperature by some heated observations regarding the relations between Wilson and Bryan. The Senator declares that the President will have Bryan's earnest support for re-nomination and for re-election; and he adds that Bryan's support is essential to Wilson if the latter is to have a second term.

"Essential" is right. Bryan made Wilson—as Champ Clark can testify. Bryan can eliminate Wilson. Indeed, it is probable that he has already done so.

During the next sixteen months there will be a constant endeavor on the part of Wilson's friends to show that he and his ex-Secretary of State are on the most cordial of terms—and the Kern interview is the forerunner of a series of such statements which will appear regularly. As a matter of fact, Senator Kern's declaration is much warmer than the relations between Wilson and Bryan. For months it has been known here that the Nebraska leader has chafed under the thralldom which the "new freedom" has put upon him. He has learned, as strong men at Princeton learned, that Woodrow Wilson can not abide to have anyone near him who can be looked upon as a possible rival. Though holding the chief place at the President's council table, Bryan has felt himself shouldered aside and crowded into a corner because of the President's irrepressible gluttony for the lime-light.

The climax came when the first Lusitania note was under consideration. At the White House, and in other quarters responsive to the President's desires, particular pains were taken to make it known that the President was taking the counsel of nobody, that he had not seen nor heard from his Secretary of State, who was the one man in all the world who should have enjoyed his chief's confidence, and that, though Bryan might sign the note, it would be Wilson's thought and Wilson's language and Wilson's policy which it contained.

Bryan felt this very keenly; and he told a friend that he would have resigned there and then but that he felt a responsibility for the policy toward Mexico and that he could not afford to leave the President in the lurch while Mexican affairs were in such an unsatisfactory condition.

Just before the framing of the second Lusitania note, the President repudiated the Mexican policy and thus absolved Bryan from further responsibility on that score; and again it was heralded from the White House that Bryan was having no share in drafting the reply to Germany. At this point the Bryanian patience ceased to be a virtue, and his resignation was tendered and accepted.

The sequel will be delayed for a time but it will be forthcoming. Former Bryan men like Senator Kern, who have political troubles of their own, will go up and down the land declaring that all is serene between Bryan and Wilson. But the truth is far otherwise. Bryan may render lip-service to Wilson as he did to Parker in 1904. But Bryan's friends, and they are legion, will remember the slight which Woodrow Wilson has put upon the man who made him.

Well Tempered Living.

The statistics of insanity show that the minds of men and women are often made aberrant through the steady drive of environment, in which the simple life and the spurring city life are equally at fault. The figures show the per capita of insanity differs little in city and country. Rural solitude and the abnormal life of the city are alike responsible for mental diseases. It is as bad for man to be too much alone as it is for him to be surrounded by prefervid life. The history of the race, the inquiries of investigators and the judgment of specialists in the diseases of mind and body tell us that the well tempered life, void of excesses, is the plane upon which men and women best endure in mental and bodily health; a temperance of thought and a temperance of action in an environment in which the individual is neither submerged by human society or detached from it. —Seattle Post.

Palestine.

Eli Wilson and wife were Palestine visitors last Friday.

George Harris and wife are residents of this place at present. They are occupying the property owned by Mr. Davis.

V. D. Ware and wife called at T. J. Wilson's last Sunday.

Mrs. Hout, our excellent hotel-keeper, has added much to the appearance of her property by the addition of a large verandah in front.

Here is an item which was put into our hands for Journal readers. Those who read may comment. "The German Township Sunday School Convention, Sunday afternoon, held in the Disciple church, was real interesting and some good things were said by the speakers. All those on the program filled their places. The crowd wasn't very large, as the churches in the convention were pretty well represented at the Sunday base ball games. It seems like a good many are trying to get away from Sabbath keeping and have laid their religion away in cotton." Those who attended this Sunday school convention heard an extra good talk on "Bible Pictures" by Dr. Cromley. Little Henrietta Brown sang a very sweet little song in a pleasing way. The next convention will be held at Fairview on September 1.

Field Mice.

Every farmer in the country is more or less acquainted with field mice. Other common names for these rodents are meadow mice, pine mice, moles, bear mice, buck-tail mice, and black mice. Where numerous, they are decidedly injurious to farm crops. A very few of the rodents will cause serious injury to lawns, young orchards, gardens, and nurseries.

In lawns and gardens the rodents may most successfully be combated by trapping. The guillotine type of mouse trap should be carefully placed in their runs. Persistent trapping will usually exterminate them. Other methods of combating them are poisoning, frequent cultivation of the soil, and the protection of their natural enemies. Among the latter are foxes, racoons, opossums, skunks, weasels, hawks, owls, and crows.

Farmers' Bulletin No. 670, which may be secured free from the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., describes the habits and methods of destroying field mice and discusses the value of protecting their natural enemies.

D. H. Moul and family of Cincinnati, after a short visit here among relatives, returned home last week.

Mrs. M. J. Coburn is a visitor with her daughter at Muncie, Ind., for this week.

Miss Sadie Pickett of Dayton was a visitor yesterday at the home of her parents, R. A. Pickett and wife.

Harvesting is greatly hindered on account of the recent heavy rains, amounting to a flood in the bottoms and low lands. A considerable part of what was cut was floated off by the high water. Corn and other crops have suffered great loss. Losses from this source will run into thousands of dollars. No definite estimate can be made at this time of damages resulting from the rain and wind storms visiting this locality, and the end does not appear to be here, from the lowering and threatening appearance of the weather.

J. H. Knieley entertained visitors yesterday.

Mrs. Hunt, widow of A. J. Hunt, hotel man here for several years, who has been spending some time in Massachusetts since the death of her husband, returned here last week to renew old friendships and spend a few days with her former friends.

Clarence J. Miller's improvement in sewerage and filling water course, has not proved entirely successful, and on account of breakage of the sewers and obstruction of the water his lot was badly inundated, the water getting into his cellar during the rain storm of last week. Guess he will make the improvement more substantial in his next attempt.

S. Finnel, Dr. J. Vanlue, Ward Stoltz and Ford Clark are off on a fishing excursion for a few days this week at a lake in Logan county. Of course, they will fare well on fish food and improve their mental and physical condition.

Large crowds have attended nightly a free vaudeville performance on our streets for a week or more. It seems interest is increasing in the entertainment.

The district board of education met here today to transact current business, part of which was the employment of a superintendent for the district. It has not been disclosed whose pole knocked the persimmon.

Upon a canvass of the sentiment of our village council at its meeting today it was ascertained that it was favorable to do its share of a cement sidewalk to the cemetery nearby. If the township powers that be, will perform its duty the needed sidewalk will be built so as to make travel to the cemetery more agreeable.

The Toad.

The toad lives from ten to forty years, and it can lay over a thousand eggs a year. It has lived two years without food, but cannot live long under water. It never takes dead or motionless food. It captures and devours wasps, yellow-jackets, ants, beetles, spiders, worms, snails, bugs, grasshoppers, crickets, weevils, caterpillars, moths, etc. In twenty-four hours the toad consumes enough food to fill its stomach four times. A single toad will in three months devour over 10,000 insects. If every ten of these would have done one cent damage the toad has saved ten dollars. Evidently the toad is a valuable friend to the farmer, gardener, and fruit-grower, and can be made especially useful in the greenhouse, garden, and berry patch.
